Sir Roy Calne's medical expertise is legendary. As a pioneer in the organ transplant field, he developed and performed landmark surgical procedures. He is a prolific writer and researcher, and has received numerous international awards including a Knighthood in 1986. He has been twice nominated for the Nobel.

Sir Roy is also an artist of stature, whose work has been included in exhibitions at the Barbican Gallery, Royal Academy and throughout the world. Art has, at times, worked symbiotically with his medical interests, but also exists independently.

In line with the multi-disciplinary focus of the VISION CULTURE LECTURES, this talk and discussion will reveal Sir Roy's personal experiences with the relationships between art, surgery and transplantation.

We look forward to your participation.
